Dear Sir(s),

I only wish to comment that since the State of Indiana created the no call (for telemarketing) list I have not been bothered at the dinner table with unwanted phone solicitors. I feel that I am the one paying for my phone and I do NOT wish that any company ever call me in an attempt to sell something (anything).

I feel that the Consumer Bankers Association's (CBA) effort to weaken Indiana State Law will result in an outrageous intrusion into my personal enjoyment of life. It will result in unwanted, unneeded, intrusive, bothersome, annoying phone calls on my phone that I pay for at inconvenient times. Let them use normal means of advertisement, newspapers, radio, and television.

I would also like to state that these phone calls from telemarketers are tantamount to internet SPAM, and I dislike that as much.

Sincerely yours,

Denton Moore
